

SAFEGUARDING THE FUTURE

// “We choose to do these things not because they are easy, but because they are hard; because that goal will serve to organise and measure the best of our energies and skills, because that challenge is one that we are willing to accept, one we are unwilling to postpone, and one we intend to win” (JFK) //

Costs of Carbon are real

In 2022 we introduced our work on Carbon Value at Risk where we looked at the potential value destruction if companies were forced to suddenly pay for the costs of their carbon emissions. At the time, we were concerned about the introduction of aggressive legislation and how that might take companies by surprise if they weren't preparing for it.

Post our late 2022 report, the new Labour government reformed the Safeguard mechanism in 2023. We took the opportunity at that point to review the covered facilities list, map the facilities to listed entities and compare this list to our portfolio holdings. We have used this list to selectively engage with companies to understand how they intend to tackle the decarbonisation journey ahead of them and importantly, how much its going to cost.

In late 2023, we also introduced a more granular assessment of company net zero plans in the Environmental component of our in-house ESG assessment. The aim of this enhancement is to be able to track how many of our companies are doing genuine work on climate change transition. We look at whether there is a net zero plan in place, whether it has a target net zero year and an interim target, the quality of the plan, percentage reduction from baseline and the measurement methodology (intensity or absolute).

30% of our portfolio by weight have a net zero plan in place. Of the remainder, we know that 46% don't have plan in place and 23% of the portfolio has an unknown status at this stage.

As part of this exercise, we've also made an assessment on the quality of the published net zero plans. In this rating structure, 1 is poor quality (very little in identified projects that make a meaningful difference to emissions or complete reliance on 3rd parties) and 5 is high quality (comprehensive disclosure on specific identified projects with clear steps to implementation and guided timeframes). Unsurprisingly, there are very few high quality Net Zero plans, and the bulk of those we looked at were average to low quality at best.

Safeguard facilities list – observations

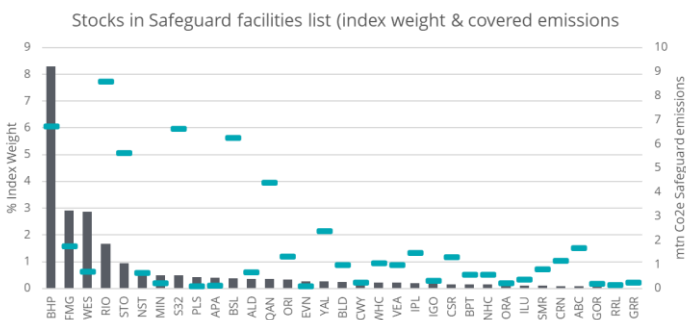

Of the 138mtn Co2e covered under the 2023 facilities list, approximately 58.6mtn of it belongs to 33 companies listed on the ASX. Of these, 6mtn Co2e belongs to 11 ex100 stocks of which Longwave owns 7.

As part of this exercise, we classified the emissions into end use industries. We found it interesting to see that 10% of the covered emissions occur in hard-rock mining (largely Iron ore and Gold). And we deliberately called out the small percentage of covered emissions from Lithium. This is a single open-cut lithium mine, but interesting, non-the-less to note some of the perverse aspects of decarbonization supply chains.

Source: CER, Longwave (2023)

Of the listed stocks on the Safeguard facilities list, there's limited correlation between index weights and the absolute amount of covered emissions. As we observed in our carbon VAR work, emissions are driven more by the business model than the unit economics of the business itself.

One other high-level observation we'd make is that it appears that many coal mines (in particular thermal) have changed hands into private or to offshore entities that may very well be less motivated to spend equity capital on innovative decarbonisation technology. We will be interested to see what solutions are adopted by private players vs their listed peers over time.

Net Zero plans for Longwave companies

In our engagement with companies since we undertook these two research efforts, we have been trying to get a better understanding of how our portfolio companies are planning on complying with the safeguard legislation. Our curiosity has also led us to engage with companies in various supply chains to understand the progress on industrial technology that is needed for these decarbonisation pathways.

The table below lists our assessment for the 7 portfolio companies that are on the Safeguard facilities list. The percentage reduction target relates to their 2030 interim target date and we have also shown our assessment of plan quality. You will see that two companies listed as not having a plan have provided enough information for us to do a quality rating. These companies have stated ambitions, but no commitment. In some cases they appear to have done quite a bit of background work on possible decarbonisation pathways, but there is little in the way of published information.

	Have a plan?	Interim target	% Reduction	Plan Quality
BPT	Yes	2030	35%	3
CSR	Yes	2030	20%	5
CRN	Yes	2030	30%	2
GOR	No	0	0%	1
SMR	No	0	0%	2
VEA	Yes	2030	10%	2

In our engagement with companies, we've learnt a few key things that will impact companies ability to comprehensively decarbonise their operations:

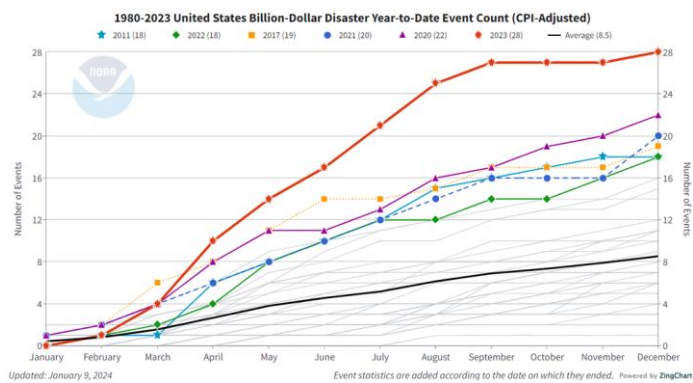

- Easy wins in Hard Rock and Coal mining tend to be renewable electrification of process plants. In many cases, this can be done using third party capital. However, due to power reliability requirements for process plants, fully renewable power is currently not economic (gas tends to be used to ensure power supply is completely reliable).
- Fleet decarbonisation (ie electrification) for all open pit and underground mining operations is at best a 2030 proposition. However, from our conversations with companies heavily involved in testing fleet technology solutions, we think its more likely that economic technology solutions won't be available until the mid-2030's or even later. Electric fleet solutions are likely to require complete mine re-designs along with wholesale fleet replacement. Underground mines are probably more likely to transition to electrification quicker given their fleets are smaller, lighter and they haul little to no waste rock (only ore).
- Fugitive emissions in coal mining can be a significant problem (and not all coal mines are made the same). Technology exists to partially deal with fugitive emissions from underground coal mines in an economic manner. However, the task in an open cut coal mine (advance coal seam gas production from future mining areas) is harder, and only in the testing phase.

- Capex required to implement near-term identified projects (even in the case of CSR who had the highest quality plan with identified projects) is so low as to be entirely digestible within BAU capex budgets. That said, we got the impression that companies are reluctant to work on the next leg of decarbonization projects because they don't want to spend capital dollars on experimental technology.

Overall, we take heart that there is a lot of activity going on behind the scenes across a swathe of industries. However, our engagement so far has simply served to confirm our long-held view that the real task of decarbonising industrial supply chains is really hard and will take a lot longer than was originally envisioned.

Other thoughts on the real costs of climate change

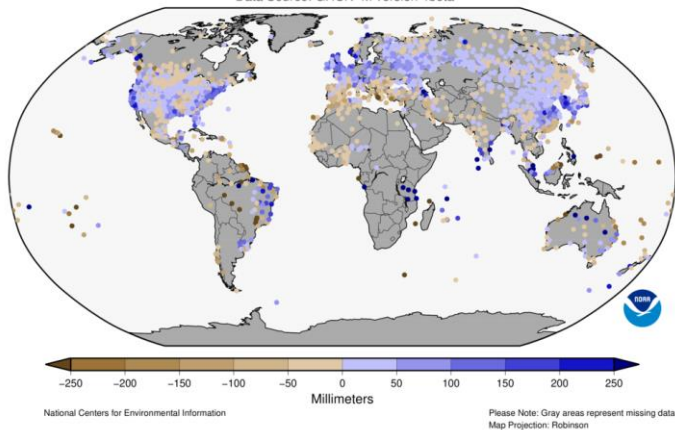

It will not have been lost on Australian market participants just how wet the South-East Coast summer has been this year and how many "once in 100 year" weather events have occurred in the last 5 years. These events have not been isolated to Australia. 2023 was an outlier in the USA for greater than $1bn weather disasters.

Source: NOAA

China (still the factory floor for the world) has also seen unprecedented rainfall this year (see below) which has been disruptive in particular to south-east China. So far we haven't heard of any specific supply chain issues from our Australian companies, but at some point, this could become an issue.

What strikes us is the potential second-order effects of this more extreme weather. Extreme weather events can lead to a myriad of issues in supply chains and increases in the cost of building capital projects (residential, commercial and infrastructure build). All householders can see the increases in their insurance premiums. Some of this is just socialisation of the increased cost of insuring some households against extreme weather events.

In the mining sector it can shut down production for days or weeks at a time. And recovery costs are often being incurred months and years after the record event.

Viewed on a global scale though, we can see that all of these individual discrete extreme weather events are likely to add up to sustained background inflationary pressure. No one isolated event will ever be called out for a "spike" in inflation, but taken in aggregate, disruptions to supply and a sustained increase in cost of doing business due to delays will lead companies to raise prices where they can. We learnt through covid that humans are incredibly adaptable and its likely that supply chains will simply shift and adapt to these impacts in the short term. But it stands to reason that the next-best options will probably be more expensive.

Voting Observations:

In the year to 31st December 2023 we cast 666 ballots for 128 company AGM's. Of those, 18% were AGAINST votes, but this hides the fact that we voted against at least one resolution in 44% of the AGM's (56 of the 128 AGM's in total) we voted on.

Many of these AGAINST votes (again) related to Remuneration practices (both Remuneration reports and Equity issuance to executives or board members).
